Q: Difference between ApiLevels & AndroidManifest.xml? I am making an app using the Android Software Development Kit (SDK) and came across this warning: The supported API level is set to API Level

- - - - - I'm going to launch this collection of blogs based around historical and contemporary women. Think of it as a journal, a scrapbook, a wiki, a magazine, a way to organize and collect ideas.

I'm trying to do something different from the usual blogging about fashion or literary worlds or alternative lifestyles. I've got a long, long list of things I'd like to research and write about, but I haven't got the time. The only way I can think to find the time to do it is to concentrate on one particular historical period and dedicate a day to one topic. Or something like that. The point of this will be to make the content easily accessible. I'll write it in a way that makes it easy to find (which means it will be in a list). So go ahead and comment on the posts. Suggest what other topics you'd like to see. If you want to share an idea with me, just comment on the post, not on the list of blogs. I'll start out by writing what topics I'm interested in and building off the comments. Here's the skinny on today's blog: Rita Mae Brown is a feminist, romance novelist, comedienne, and an American icon in the literary world. Born January 29, 1938
