I used to think that learning how to write a proper sentence was an impossible task. But I was wrong! Writing is learned by reading, not by writing. So when your eyes are tired after reading for hours, you can stop and re-read the sentence that compelled you to write it in the first place. It will help you understand why it's important and what makes it different from other sentences in the same paragraph. Use this tutorial on how to learn how to write a proper sentence and get back into writing. 1. Read, read, read. Reading is the key to writing a sentence properly. Most of your sentences will come from a person's point of view and their way of thinking, thinking that you can't be bothered to do it yourself. So you have to learn how to immerse yourself in the writing of someone who feels emotions and has passions. Read everything from fiction to nonfiction and write what interests you in your own point of view! 2. Perform every action with purpose in mind. If you are trying to help someone, use "to" instead of "so" in the sentence. And if you are describing an emotion, remember that there are two kinds of emotion words: active and passive. If your sentences get clunky or hard to read because the same word is used too often, change it or delete it. For example, "I felt sad that we left our friends at the lake," not just "I felt sad." It's important that your words do not recycle across many lines in a paragraph. 3. Type it out and rewrite it in free space. Writing is much better done on a laptop or desktop computer than old school, so save yourself the headache and write your sentences on one of those. After you have finished writing your piece, it's time to edit. Read it aloud to find sentences that are awkward or are repeated too often. Then rewrite the sentences into one that is easy for readers to understand. 4. Find someone who will proofread for you! It's easy to make mistakes when proofreading since you are reading what you already wrote instead of looking at the words as if they were new to you. Also, modern technology is able to see if an article has too many or too few words, so find someone who will look over what you have written and pick out things that are grammatically correct. 5. Edit it more than once! This is another thing that computers can do for us. If there are strong ideas in your piece or some passages that need to be added or eliminated, use the software on your computer to break down the piece into smaller chunks and edit it again before putting it back together. 6.
